THE QUESTION THIS PROPOSAL ANSWERS

Is anybody going to go to the show?

You put it better than we would have. Everything in this document is built to make that question answerable by February, and the answer yes by the time the 2027 dates are being booked.

WHAT IS ALREADY IN PLACE

This cycle is already unusually well built.

The world

A visual-first project with a finished aesthetic, and the Kissing You video past a million views on YouTube.

The film

A live performance film shot in Hanoi, in the visual language the project already owns.

The premiere

A national cinema in central Amsterdam during ADE — a room largely made of the people who book shows.

Radio

Your Army delivered around a thousand spins across Europe on the first EP, and royalties that actually paid.

Paid media

Run in-house across the first cycle, by someone who already knows the accounts and the history.

The record

A second EP written for the stage rather than the playlist — rawer, more analog, more hardware.

Six real assets. What none of them produces on its own is the evidence that gets a show booked.

WHAT WE WOULD RUN

Find them, keep them, then sell them a ticket.

Three things in a fixed order, because the third one does not work without the first two. You keep the creative, the film and the radio. We take the machinery underneath them.

01

Paid media

Conversion testing on every section of every track, then scaled to grow the streaming audience deliberately in the cities where 2027 dates are plausible.

02

Fan flows

Every new follower turned into a name, an email and a city. First-party data that stays yours when the campaign stops.

03

Live demand

The audience read as a map — where the people are, how many, how warm — and then converted when there are dates to convert them to.

04

Weekly reporting

One written page every week. You are several time zones away for a good part of this and should never have to ask.

WHY THE STREAMING NUMBER MATTERS

An agent opens Spotify before they answer the email.

You called the monthly listener count a vanity metric, and read on its own it is. But it is also the first thing a booking agent, a promoter and a festival programmer look at, and they are not reading it as vanity — they are reading it as a risk check, and they are reading it city by city. Growing that number is not the goal of this cycle. It is how the goal gets approved.

01

It is the first door

Before anyone asks about the film or the live show, they check the profile. One that is moving says the project is live. One that is flat says it is over, whatever else is true.

02

It is already a map

Spotify reports listeners city by city, which is the same data an agent uses to route a run of dates. We can grow it deliberately in the markets you actually want to play.

03

It makes the tickets cheap

Someone already streaming the record converts on a ticket ad at a fraction of what a stranger costs. Every listener built before February is spend the 2027 on-sale does not have to make.

THE CAMPAIGN

September to February

THE SHAPE OF IT

Six months, one destination.

SEPTEMBER

The cycle opens

Testing begins on the new material. We find out who this record is for.

OCTOBER

ADE and the film

The premiere becomes the campaign. Every route out of it captures.

NOV — DEC

Scale what worked

Spend weighted onto the cuts, sounds and countries that responded.

JANUARY

Warm the list

The audience built since September hears from the artist before the press does.

FEBRUARY

The EP, and the map

The record lands, and the booking case goes to whoever pitches the 2027 dates.

The tight date is October, not February. The premiere is the largest single moment of attention in the whole cycle and it falls in week six. The capture flows have to be live and tested before it, which means building them in September — not around the release.

PHASE 01 OF 03

September

Find the audience

The second EP is a different record. It probably wants different people.

You described the first EP as the safer, more commercial one and this one as rawer, more analog, more hardware-driven. That is a real change, and the quiet assumption that the same audience follows across it is the one that costs a campaign its first two months. September is where we find out, on a budget small enough that being wrong is cheap rather than expensive.

01

Test the record itself

Every section of every track against a control visual — intro, build, drop, breakdown — to find the eight seconds that actually stop someone.

02

Read the new audience

The live and hardware end of electronic run against the audience the first EP found, as competing hypotheses rather than an assumption.

03

Capture from day one

The flows live before the film premieres, so October arrives with somewhere for the attention to go.

PHASE 02 OF 03

October

The film is the campaign

A premiere is a moment of attention. Most of them leave nothing behind.

The Hanoi film and the ADE screening are the strongest assets in this cycle and they are already made. The work is not producing them, it is making sure every person who sees a frame of it — in the cinema, in a trailer, in an ad — has somewhere to go that ends with us knowing their name and their city. This is a month of distribution, not production.

01

Cut the film for paid

Trailer edits tested the same way the music is, so the film buys attention outside the room as well as inside it.

02

Weight it to the cities

Spend concentrated on the markets where 2027 dates are plausible, rather than wherever conversions happen to be cheapest that week.

03

Everything captures

Screening, trailer, socials and ads all route to the same flow. One premiere, one list, no leakage.

PHASE 03 OF 03

February

The EP, and the case

A booking agent wants to know where the people are.

By release the useful output is a geography rather than a single figure. Spotify reports listeners city by city and the capture list reports contactable people city by city, and put together they say: this many, here, at this depth, who have heard from the artist directly and opened it. That is a thing a promoter can price a room against — and it is the same document whether the conversation is about a support slot or a headline date.

01

Release, properly supported

The EP gets the full campaign — but weighted with everything learned since September rather than started from scratch.

02

Hand over the map

Streaming by city and list by city in one document. Yours, in a format an agent or promoter can act on without translating it first.

03

Ready for the dates

When shows are confirmed, the ticketing campaign runs against a warm audience instead of a cold one, which is a far cheaper exercise than starting from nothing.

HOW THE PAID MEDIA WORKS

We test the song, not just the ad.

The reason this works on records nobody has heard yet is that nothing about it is a guess. Every section of the track competes against the others on cost until one of them wins, and the campaign is then built on that answer rather than on somebody's opinion about which bit is the hook. As spend scales we read Spotify for Artists alongside the ad platform and go country by country, because the cheapest conversion and the most valuable one are rarely in the same place.

01

Test every part of the song

Intro, build, drop, breakdown — each against a control visual, so the winner is measured rather than chosen.

02

Build the creative to it

Variants cut to the winning sound, run against each other until the cost per result stops falling.

03

Scale country by country

Tier one markets read individually, weighted toward where the record is genuinely resonating and where you want to play.

04

Report it back weekly

Including what we turned off. A test that fails is the campaign working, not the campaign failing.

THE SAME METHOD, TWICE

Different records. The same three weeks.

Two dance records with no audience on release day, run the same way a few months apart. Neither of these had a head start and neither needed a large budget — what they needed was for the testing to find the audience before the scaling spent against it.

THE AUDIENCE YOU KEEP

A million people watched Kissing You. We cannot name one.

That is not a criticism of the campaign — it is how the platforms are built. Views and listeners are rented, and the rental ends when the spend does. The $25,000 that went through Meta on the first cycle bought reach it was never asked to keep. This time we ask it to.

STEP 01

A new follower

Someone follows the account off the back of the film, a video or an ad. That is the whole trigger.

STEP 02

An automatic DM

A message within seconds — hello, and an offer of something they cannot get anywhere else.

STEP 03

First-party capture

A name and an email, given willingly. It belongs to M07, not to the platform that made the introduction.

STEP 04

Something to listen to

A demo or an unreleased cut lands in their inbox. The list is used before it is ever asked for anything.

STEP 05

A voice note back

From the artist, once they have listened. This is where a follower becomes someone who turns up.

FROM LISTENERS TO TICKET BUYERS

We are good at selling tickets. Just not as the first thing.

Ticketing is the part of this we would be judged on in 2027, and it is also the part that fails when it is run on its own. A ticket campaign against a cold audience is just an expensive advert. Against five months of captured, warmed, city-tagged people it is a different exercise entirely — which is why the order in this proposal is not negotiable.

01

Retarget, do not prospect

The people most likely to buy are the ones already listening. Ticket spend goes to them first, at a fraction of the cost of finding someone new.

02

The list goes first

On-sale is announced to the captured audience before it is advertised to anyone. Early sales are what make a promoter comfortable.

03

Attribution that holds

Every sale traced to the campaign that caused it, so the second run of dates is priced on evidence rather than on hope.

HOW WE WORK

One page, every week

WHO DOES WHAT

One team, and one person accountable.

Peter Jarrett ACCOUNTABLE

Sits above the campaign and answers for it as a whole — the plan, the spend and anything that slips. In the room for the decisions that matter.

Senior Marketing Director

Tobias Steinborn

Holds the six months as one calendar and runs the weekly. Works alongside your marketing person rather than over the top of them.

Campaign Strategist

Oskar

Plans each phase — what is tested, against whom, and what the result changes about the next one. Owns the capture flows end to end.

Paid media

Holly

Daily hands on the accounts. Builds the tests and the cuts, kills what is not working and scales what is, across all six months.

REPORTING

Every Monday, without being asked.

Written, so it works across whatever time zone you are in that month, and a call whenever you want one rather than on a standing slot you have to take at two in the morning. You should never chase us for a number and never learn about a problem on the day it lands.

01

What ran

Spend, cost per result, the cuts and countries working and the ones we have switched off.

02

What the record did

Streams, saves, listeners by city and the algorithmic picture, read against the spend rather than beside it.

03

What the list did

Captures, opens and replies, and which cities they came from — the audience you still own when the campaign ends.

04

What is next

The week ahead, and anything needing a decision from you with the date it is needed by.

FROM YOUR SIDE

Four things and we can start.

01

Access

The Meta business assets and ad account you already ran, Spotify for Artists, and the Instagram account the flows attach to.

02

The film, and the right to cut it

Footage and stems in a form we can edit from, plus whatever the director's agreement allows us to run as advertising. This is the October plan, so it is the first thing to check.

03

The release dates

Singles, the EP, and the ADE screening date. Testing has to be finished before the premiere, not started around it.

04

Where you want to be bookable

The cities that would make 2027 a success. Every spending decision from September changes depending on the answer, so it is worth deciding early rather than at the end.

THE ENGAGEMENT

Six months, two ways to do it.

MONTHLY

$2,500 pcm

Six payments across the term. $15,000 in total, invoiced monthly from the start date.

BY THE QUARTER

$6,000 ×2

One on the start date and one on 1 December. The same six months for $3,000 less — committing up front is worth something to us, so it is worth something to you.

This is the fee only. Ad spend is yours, set by you and paid to the platforms directly; the third-party software the flows need — Manychat and similar — runs to a few hundred a month. We never mark up either. For context, the first cycle ran roughly $25,000 through Meta, and the September phase is deliberately cheap: the point of it is to be wrong inexpensively before anything is scaled.

The cycle opens next month.

On Wednesday the useful things to settle are the ADE date, what we are allowed to cut from the film, and which cities 2027 is aimed at. Those three answers set the whole of September.

01

Wednesday's call — scope, dates and territories.

02

Access granted, film assets reviewed.

03

Capture flows built and tested in September.

04

Live and proven before the premiere.
