Confidential and proprietary information.

THREE MONTHS · TWO SINGLES AND AN EP

Paid media, and the fans it buys you.

One team buying every platform the way that platform actually works — and a fan flow underneath it, so what the spend finds is something Archie keeps.

SCOPE OF SERVICES

Three pillars.

Meta | TikTok | CRM & fan flow

Meta is the engine and the one with the longest record behind it, so the method comes first, then the two that feed it.

How we find the hit?

01 Find the sound

We cut the record into sections and test each one against a control visual, to see which seconds actually stop someone scrolling.

02 Test the content at scale

Dozens of variations around the winning sound — film clips, meme clips, mood videos — against cold audiences in every market that matters.

03 Validate the cost

Every test returns a real cost per new listener. That number decides what gets the budget and what gets dropped.

04 Scale what converts

Budget follows the number, reallocated daily, country by country. America can be the cheapest and Germany still the one worth more per listener.

PILLAR 01

Meta

Every song tested before release, so the money knows where to go.

Twenty-one songs are coming. Micro-spends against cold audiences on each of them, before release, tell us which ones can carry a campaign — so the budget goes hard at the moment that deserves it rather than spreading evenly across a cycle and hoping. On the released records we run UGC-style creative rather than “out now, stream here”, and we boost what earns attention on its own.

01

Pre-release micro-testing

Every song on the EP, at small money, against cold audiences — the plan agreed on 5 August.

02

UGC over announcements

Creative built to be watched rather than obeyed, then put behind spend once it proves it holds.

03

Read on Spotify, not on Meta

Spotify for Artists is the scoreboard: which markets convert, which retain, and what a listener really costs.

Runs on Archie’s page or on a fan page, whichever the team prefers — both work, and it is a preference rather than a performance question.

PILLAR 02

TikTok

Put money behind what already earned attention.

Audience targeting pointed at the posts that have already done something on their own. Reach and audience growth is what the platform gives you, so that is what we buy — and anything that performs here becomes a Meta test the same week, which is the loop Tom described.

01

Winners only

Spend goes behind posts that have proven they hold attention, never behind untested assets.

02

Straight into the Meta tests

What works organically gets a cold-audience test within days, so TikTok stops being a separate scoreboard.

03

Seeding where it fits

Our networks are there if the record needs to be in other people's videos — alongside the ONErpm influencer team, not instead of it.

The audience you actually own

A follower is rented. An email address isn't.

Every platform decides who sees Archie and changes its mind without telling anyone. A list he built himself is the only audience that survives that, and the only one reachable on the day a single, an EP or a show goes live.

So there is a capture underneath everything else in this deck. The paid media buys the attention; the CRM keeps it. This is the flow, end to end — and it runs on its own once it is built.

CRM · THE FAN FLOW

From a new follower to a real conversation.

STEP 01

A new follower

Someone follows the account. That is the whole trigger — nothing has to be posted, sent or remembered.

STEP 02

An automatic DM

A message from Archie within seconds: hello, and would you like to hear something first?

STEP 03

First-party capture

They say yes and leave an email address. It belongs to Archie, not to the platform it came from.

STEP 04

The email

An introduction and the track they were promised, sent straight away.

STEP 05

They listen

Someone who followed an hour ago has now heard something nobody else has.

STEP 06

The voice note

An Instagram voice note in Archie's own voice — which is where the automation hands over to a person.

"Hey — obviously this was automated. But I'm a real person, and I'm glad you're here. I'm in my DMs if you want to say hey."

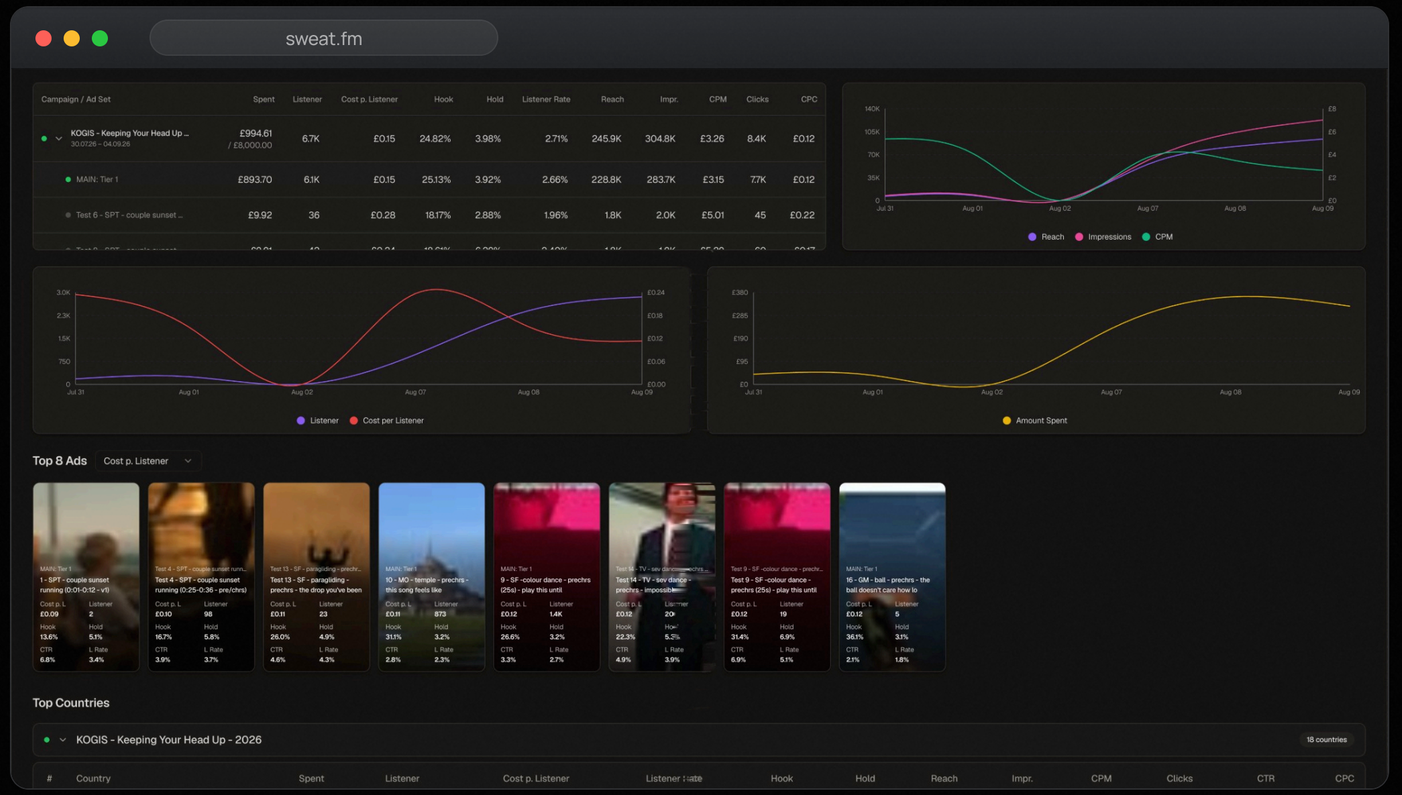

Admitting it is what makes the sequence survive a fan who can tell. Everything before this runs on its own; Archie records the voice note once.

A dashboard, daily.

Not a monthly report.

Sweat.fm is our own platform. Every campaign, every cost per result, every market, updated daily — and visible to ONErpm, Grape and Gold'n Retriever at the same time, so four organisations are reading one set of numbers instead of forwarding each other three.

SKELETON TIMELINE

Three months, two singles and an EP.

01

Month one · single one

Handover of the Meta account and the pixel. Sound tests on single one and on every unreleased song we have audio for. Alaska read through discovery mode. Fan flow built and ready to switch on.

02

Month two · single two

Single two launches on a sound we have already tested rather than a guess. Content scaled around the winners. Fan flow live and capturing, with the first read on what a captured fan is costing.

03

Month three · the EP

The EP goes out knowing which track carries it and what a listener costs in each market. Budget weighted to that, not spread evenly. Full read on the quarter, and a decision on the next two EPs.

Deliberately no dates in it. Tom flagged that the EP timeline was going to your weekly — give us those dates and this becomes a calendar rather than a shape, in an afternoon.

EXPECTED RESULTS

The numbers we hold ourselves to.

Not a forecast. Nobody can promise a result on an unreleased record, and it was said on the call that these are hard to generate. What we can do is name exactly which numbers decide things, what we have hit on comparable campaigns, and agree now what would count as working.

01

Cost per listener

The number that decides everything. Across the campaigns in our case studies it runs 14p to 24p.

02

Hook and hold

Read per asset. It is what tells us a piece of content is worth scaling before the spend proves it.

03

Spotify retention

Above 1% is good, above 2% is strong — the benchmark the team is already using on Alaska.

04

Emails captured

The one output that keeps its value after the campaign stops. Reported weekly like everything else.

And the promise that costs us money to keep: if a song is not converting, we say so and move to the next one.

FEES & COSTS

Half our standard rate.

META

£750 a month

Meta paid media on its own — sound testing, creative testing, the buying, and the Spotify read behind it.

CROSS-PLATFORM & FAN FLOWS

£1,500 a month

Meta plus TikTok and YouTube, with the CRM fan flow built and running underneath all of it.

TERMS

01

Billed quarterly

Per month, paid a quarter at a time — £2,250 or £4,500 for the three months in this proposal.

02

Ad spend on top

At cost, never marked up. The testing plan we agreed runs about £700 an EP — roughly £10 an asset, £50–150 a song.

03

Influencer seeding

Per campaign, at cost plus our fee — and only where the ONErpm team is not already covering it.

One quarter, then a decision on the next two EPs. No longer tie-in than that.

What we'd need from you.

01

Access

Meta Business Manager, the pixel, and Spotify for Artists. Read-only is enough to start.

02

The audio

Rough or finished, for every song we are testing ahead of release. Nothing leaves our hands.

03

The dates

Single one, single two, the EP, and the Infinity Cove shoot — whatever the weekly settles on.

04

One approver

One name who can sign off creative same-day. With four organisations on the call, this is the thing that decides pace.

Prepared for St Lundi, Grape, ONErpm and Gold'n Retriever Entertainment.

Let’s start with single one.

You said you’d like us to work with you. This is the shape of it — pick a tier, send the dates, and we can be testing sound inside a week.

01

Pick a tier — Meta, or cross-platform with the fan flows.

02

Access and audio over, dates confirmed off your weekly.

03

Sound tests live within a week.

04

Three months later, a decision on the next two EPs.
